The Department

The Department of Biochemistry at the University of Cambridge is a world-leading biochemical research and education facility, building on the University's tradition of scientific enquiry to enable and support outstanding science. As part of the School of the Biological Sciences our excellent undergraduate and postgraduate education programmes develop the next generation of scientists, whilst over 50 research groups led by investigators of international standing collaborate with colleagues around the world to answer fundamental questions on how cells and their constituent molecules work in life and relate to disease.

The Department is located in two main buildings located on Tennis Court Road. The original Hopkins Building on the Downing Site started life in 1924 as the Sir William Dunn Institute of Biochemistry, under the inspirational leadership of our founder, Frederick G. Hopkins. The Hopkins Building is beautiful, elegant and, equally important for a modern teaching and research department, has been extensively refurbished in recent years. Our other main building, located on the Old Addenbrooke's Hospital Site, is named after the late, great Fred Sanger, an alumnus of the Department and winner of two Nobel Prizes in Chemistry – one for the sequencing of proteins and the second for developing the technology to sequence DNA that precipitated the genomics revolution. The Sanger Building was funded by generous donations from Peter and Paula Beckwith, the Wolfson Foundation, the Wellcome Trust and many others and was opened formally by Fred Sanger himself in November 1997.

Research

The focus of our scientific investigation can broadly be broken down into nine research themes: Chemical Biology & Drug Design, Disease Biology, DNA & Chromatin Biology, Molecular Microbiology, Plant Biochemistry & Bioenergy,

RNA Biology, Signalling & Trafficking, Stem Cell Biology, and Systems Biology. These themes are not mutually exclusive, however, with many of our Research Group Leaders conducting research spanning multiple areas. To support our world-leading biochemical research and education programmes, the Department of Biochemistry houses state-of-the-art core facilities, including cryo-electron microscopy, NMR spectroscopy, crystallography, biophysics, mass spectrometry, protein chemistry, metabolomics, and advanced services for protein and nucleic acid sequencing.

Teaching

The teaching programmes of the Biochemistry Department embody a fundamental approach to the chemistry of life and convey the strongly unifying contribution of biochemistry and molecular biology to other scientific disciplines. We teach students in four undergraduate years, in both the Natural Sciences Tripos (NST) and the Medical Sciences Tripos and Veterinary Sciences Tripos. Courses in the Faculty of Biology increasingly flow across departmental boundaries, where there is scientific common ground, in terms of personnel and planning.

The Department also delivers Part III Biochemistry course which caters for students who expect to continue with postgraduate research, and leads to a Master of Natural Science Degree (MSci) as well as the usual BA to which all Cambridge undergraduate science courses lead. The Department also has major contribution to the Part III in Systems Biology.

The Department contributes to a highly competitive postgraduate programme that support 160 postgraduate students in all fields of Biochemistry.

The University

The University of Cambridge is one of the world's oldest and most successful universities. We are a renowned centre for research, education, and scholarship that makes a significant contribution to society. The University is consistently ranked amongst the top universities in the world. Our affiliates have won more Nobel Prizes than any other University.

Our sustained pursuit of academic excellence is built on a long history of first-class teaching and research within a distinctive collegiate system. For eight centuries our ideas and innovations have shaped the world. Our principal goal is to remain one of the world's leading universities in an increasingly competitive global higher education sector. Today the University of Cambridge is at the centre of a cluster of over 4,300 businesses employing 58,000 people.

Our capital investment projects include the West Cambridge site, the North West Cambridge development and the growth of the Biomedical Campus in the south of the city. The North West Cambridge development includes the opening of a primary school – the first in the UK to be managed by a University. So we are deeply embedded in, and committed to serving, our local community. These are all conspicuous signs of a University that is not only adapting to new needs, but also anticipating the future.

Our mission is to contribute to society through the pursuit of education, learning, and research at the highest international levels of excellence. Our core values are:

- freedom of thought and expression; and
- freedom from discrimination.

About us

The University is one of the world's leading academic centres. It comprises 150 faculties and departments, together with a central administration and other institutions. Our institutions, museums and collections are a world-class resource for researchers, students and members of the public representing one of the country's highest concentrations of internationally important collections.

The University has an annual income of £2 billion. Research income, won competitively from the UK Research Councils, the European Union (EU), major charities and industry, exceeds £500 million per annum and continues to grow.

The Colleges and the University remain committed to admitting the best students regardless of their background and to investing considerable resources both in widening access and financial support. The 31 Colleges are self-governing, separate legal entities which appoint their own staff. Many academic staff are invited to join a College as a Teaching Fellow, which provides a further social and intellectual dimension. The Colleges admit students, provide student accommodation and deliver small group teaching.

The University awards degrees and its faculties and departments provide lectures and seminars for students and determine the syllabi for teaching and conducting research.

Our instinct for seeking out excellence and setting up enduring and mutually beneficial collaborations has led us to establish strategic partnerships across the globe. Whether it is the successful Cambridge-Africa Programme involving universities in Ghana, Uganda and elsewhere on the African continent; or the close association with the government of India to pursue new research in crop science; or the creation, with Germany's Max Planck Institutes, of a Cambridge-based centre for the study of ethics, human economy and social change – international partnerships are now an inextricable part of the University's make-up.

“Cambridge graduates and researchers have made – and continue to make – a colossal contribution to human knowledge and the understanding of the world around us. Their work touches on the lives and livelihoods of everyone from patients diagnosed with life-threatening diseases, to residents of areas critically affected by climate change, to children growing up in conflict zones. It has a lasting impact on our society, our economy and our culture: the world is truly a better place thanks to their efforts.”

Stephen Toope, Vice Chancellor 2019
